Naturally Gorgeous, Culturally Saturated

Williamstown rests in a high valley between the Green Mountains (in Vermont) and the Taconics (in New York) — a college town in an old farming community in the homeland of the Mohican people — a home for world-class art where you’ll find mountain laurel on the Appalachian trail.

In summer, the Clark Art Institute expands from its collection of Impressionists into contemporary and global work and welcomes visitors to roam their hiking trails and meditate along their reflecting pools. The Williams College Museum of Art, free to all, holds conversations outdoors over a glass of wine. And just up the road, MASS MoCA brings international artists to one of the largest contemporary art spaces in the world, with live music in the mill courtyards on warm nights.

The Tony Award-winning Williamstown Theatre Festival develops world premiere plays and musicals here, often before the works move to New York and regional theatres across the nation, and actors join in the Town’s July 4 Celebration, reading from the country’s founding documents and the speeches of Frederick Douglass. You may well find an acclaimed playwright working at a coffee shop or a well-known actor relaxing with a local ice cream cone before rehearsal.
In the fall, Williams College comes alive. You can feel the energy of creative life, as curious minds — from astronomers and activists to journalists and poets — come to talk with the students and the Town. You can walk through campus for a night of free music or international dance, or stroll downtown for an independent film at Images Cinema.

As the trees turn red and gold, you can walk above the valley, soaking in color and views of Mount Greylock. In our forests and fields, you’ll find pollinator gardens, wildlife preserves and migrating birds, river paths, and waterfalls.

Winter comes in with the downtown Holiday Walk, a weekend of traditional New England flair, from old-fashioned caroling to horse-drawn carriage rides and the beloved ReinDOG Parade. Local musicians sing on the sidewalks as local chefs compete in a soup-off competition. Throughout the season, you’ll also find holiday crafts and farmers markets, as local farm shops and co-ops offer artisanal cheeses and locally-brewed cider.

On cold days, you can come in from cross-country skiing for a hot drink by the fire at a cozy inn or spend a snowy day exploring artist studios, galleries and local shops, from antiques and gently used books to toys and hand-spun wool.

And in spring, the sap houses are boiling, with wood smoke and sweet steam. You can linger over a farm breakfast with locally tapped maple syrup.

The days warm into blossoming trees and wildflowers along the river. College performances resume as the evenings grow longer, and you can search for outdoor sculptures and butterflies and turn a corner to find something unexpected that can bring you to your feet in astonishment — like coming up to the Taconic crest to find thousands of golden trout lilies in bloom.

Something for Everyone

Spend a day in Old New England
Naturally Gorgeous, Culturally Saturated

Williamstown rests in a high valley between the Green Mountains (in Vermont) and the Taconics (in New York) — a college town in an old farming community in the homeland of the Mohican people — a home for world-class art where you'll find mountain laurel on the Appalachian trail.

In summer, the Clark Art Institute expands from its collection of impressionists into contemporary and global work and welcomes visitors to roam their hiking trails and meditate along their reflecting pools. The Williams College Museum of Art, free to all, holds conversations outdoors over a glass of wine. And just up the road, MASS MoCA brings international artists to one of the largest contemporary art spaces in the world, with live music in the mill courtyards on warm nights.

The Tony Award-winning Williamstown Theatre Festival develops world premiere plays and musicals here, often before the works move to New York and regional theatres across the nation, and actors join in the Town's July 4 Celebration, reading from the country's founding documents and the speeches of Frederick Douglass. You may well find an acclaimed playwright working at a coffee shop or a well-known actor relaxing with a local ice cream cone before rehearsal.
